

Dr. V. A. V. Raman is an Associate Professor in Department of Geography, at Shaheed Bhagat Singh College, University of Delhi with more than twenty-five years of experience in research and teaching. With specialization in Geomorphology, Remote Sensing and GIS his areas of interest include Landscape System Analysis and Environment. He was one of the members in COASTEX Expedition (walkathon along Indian coastline) in early 80's. He has published and presented research works at many national and international conferences and completed a UGC sponsored research project on 'Land use Transformation'. He enjoys field work and regularly undertakes nature trails. His earlier work based on field work at Malana village in 1987, 2012 and 2015 has been published in the book titled 'Malana: A transfigured landscape.' His other publications include 'Geoheritage and Geotourism in Trans-Himalaya: A case study of Lahaul and Spiti District, Himachal Pradesh', 'Interfluves of Middle Ganga plain' and 'Geoanthropogenic Environment: An appraisal.'