

Dr. P. Thongkhanthang is a devoted scholastic who is deeply involved in population studies, demographic trends, and issues pertaining to maternal and child health, with a particular focus on North-East India. He has extensive teaching experience at Delhi University and a solid academic background, including a Ph.D. from Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi. Dr. Thang has numerous publications in prestigious journals and active participation in numerous national and international conferences. The understanding of rural public health policies and practices has been significantly enhanced by his research efforts. By mixing scholastic meticulousness with down to earth importance, his work endeavors not exclusively to progress academic talk yet in addition to illuminate and further develop medical services drives in provincial networks. Through his participation in various professional committees and proactive participation in timely evaluation procedures during academic assessments, Dr. Thang has demonstrated a dedication to bridging the gap between theory and practice. His academic career demonstrates his unwavering commitment to developing long-term healthcare solutions and expanding knowledge in his specialized field.